My Mother`s Day

My Mother`s Day is a special thing,
That always reminds me of my daughter`s sin.
Many autumns ago I was young and naive,
My mother couldn`t my greeting receive.

I was trying to share my care and love
With her and my husband, but it wasn`t enough.
Some winters had passed, my mother had gone...
I was, of course, married, but felt all alone.

My daughter is thirty, she has a boy-friend.
She loves him, for certain, I do understand.
But her best friend I didn`t become.
It`s nearly evening, she hasn`t yet come.

The daughter is breaking my mother`s heart.
I`m bitterly crying: we`re still apart.
You see, I don`t want her to follow my fate.
The holiday`s over, it can be too late!

I hope everything will be OK. Your poem touches a very serious problem.

Let it be the an artistic image that is used to educate the young generation but not harsh truth of life!
I'm afraid to think that the content reflects a fact of life!
But in that case if it's true, let us believe that the daughter will become closer to you, as soon as she becomes a mother!
As the English proverb goes, "With time and patience the leaf of the mulberry becomes satin..."

I wish you all the best!
